Paintings by Warlis of Maharashtra

The paintings by Warlis, the tribals of Maharashtra villages, depict the harvest festival, marriage festivities, the gods with sun and moon and some symbols like ladder, musical instruments, trees and shrubs and the tribe's involvement in their environment. These are neatly displayed at the Lalit Kala Gallery, Grames Road. The pictures are highly stylised with features of child-like simplicity drawn with the utmost economy of lines.

The Warlis paint on the mud walls plastered with cowdung. Pounded rice flour mixed with milk and water and sindura form the paint. Painting is not a mere form of expression; it is a sacred ritual rooted in their life and is an integral part of it. The paintings are simple, depicting the daily avocations of the people. There are also wall hangings, calendars, greeting cards, gift tags and bamboo huts and articles, handcrafted and hand-painted.

The exhibition organised by the Crafts Council of India and Grindlays Bank, will be on view till January 12, daily from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Exhibition of posters

Attractive posters featuring the activities of the Pushkin Club and the Soviet Cultural Centre, are neatly displayed at the Cultural Centre, Kasturi Ranga Road. They are the creations of G. Kasim an artist of the Pushkin Literary Club. Many of the posters highlight the meetings of the club, poets' meet and cultural programmes, organised by the Soviet Centre. Some of them, painted in poster colours with telling captions are very bright. The exhibition will be on view on Friday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.
